

Once upon a time, there was a boy named Timmy who loved to wear his favorite sweater to school. It was a cozy, lion-striped sweater in orange, blue, and yellow. Timmy felt special wearing it because it set him apart from the other kids.

One day, Timmy wore his lion-striped sweater to school, feeling happy and confident. But when he got to school, some other kids started bullying him. They said his sweater looked weird and old-fashioned. Timmy felt really sad and embarrassed.

He thought about taking off his sweater and hiding it, but then he remembered something his mother always told him: "Be proud of who you are and what you love, no matter what others say."

So, Timmy decided to ignore the bullying and wear his lion-striped sweater with pride. As the day went on, he noticed something surprising—some of the kids started complimenting him on his sweater, saying it was cool and unique.

Timmy realized that it's okay to be different and to wear what makes you happy, even if others don't understand at first. By the end of the day, he was proud of his lion-striped sweater and proud to be himself.

Moral of the story:

Always be proud of who you are and what you love, even if others don't understand. Being yourself is the greatest thing you can be!
