Short Story of Panda Li And The Life Saving Idea with Morals - Download PDF Copy

Once upon a time, a cute panda named Li lived in a bamboo forest in China. Li was fluffy, black and white, and loved eating bamboo shoots all day. He lived happily with his family and friends until one day, a big storm hit the forest.

The storm was fierce, with strong winds and heavy rain. The river near Panda Li's home began to flood, and all the animals were in danger. Panda Li looked around and saw his friends struggling to find shelter. He knew he had to do something to help them.

Suddenly, an idea struck Panda Li. He remembered seeing a cave on a nearby hill. It was high enough to keep everyone safe from the rising floodwaters. Panda Li quickly ran to his friends and shared his plan.

Led by Panda Li, all the animals rushed toward the cave. They climbed the hill and squeezed into the cave just as the floodwaters began to rise. Thanks to Panda Li's quick thinking, they were safe and dry in the cave.

When the storm passed and the floodwaters receded, the animals thanked Panda Li for saving their lives. They realized that although Panda Li was small, he had a big heart and a clever mind.

The moral of the story is: Sometimes the smallest creatures can have the biggest ideas. It's not about how big or strong you are, but how you use your intelligence and kindness to help others.
